

99-0088

The invention refers to devices for covering the man-holes of the underground lines, particularly, to the man-hole.

The man-hole is a device consisting of a body with grooves along the edges, a cover with levers on the internal surface and a cover blocking system consisting of a clamp installed into the thread-cutting cork.

The result consists in simplifying the cover blocking system structure and increasing the degree of protection from an illicit opening.