

The invention refers to the food industry.

The process, according to the invention, includes treatment of nuts into an installation with currents of superhigh frequency of 970 MHz, up to the attainment of the required humidity, the oscillatory circuit power of the installation being of 750 W.

The result consists in reducing the drying process duration and in improving the quality of the final product.

Claims: 1